

CAMBRIDGE STUDIES IN CONTENTIOUS POLITICS

'As the far right resurges across democratic societies, Zeller's groundbreaking study reveals the pivotal role of counter-mobilisation in challenging far-right movements. Through detailed cases drawn from Britain, Germany, and Austria, this important book offers a compelling framework for understanding far-right demobilisation, and how democratic societies confront right-wing extremism from within.'

Nigel Copsey, Professor of Modern History, Teesside University

'In this pioneering comparative study, Michael C. Zeller explains how and why far-right protest campaigns demobilise. Bridging social movement and far-right research, and combining fuzzy-set QCA with careful process tracing, he reveals the multiple pathways through which external pressures and counter-mobilisations cause far-right mobilisation to wane.'

Swen Hutter, Director of the Center for Civil Society Research, Freie Universität Berlin and WZB Berlin Social Science Center

'Demobilising the Far Right powerfully shifts our focus from far-right mobilisation to the often-neglected processes of demobilisation. Moving beyond the ballot box to the barricades, Zeller shows how far-right campaigns unravel through repression, resistance, and internal strain. Essential reading for anyone seeking to understand both the success and failure of far-right movements today.'

Léonie de Jonge, Professor of Research on Far-Right Extremism (Political Actors & Ideologies), University of Tübingen

'In view of the political gains made by the extreme right in many societies, one question that has not been sufficiently examined empirically and theoretically is that of the conditions for the failure of these forces. With a focus on extra-parliamentary mobilisations, Michael Zeller explores this question in an empirically rich study, also offering some fruitful theoretical considerations. The book is an invitation to ask similar questions about voter turnout at the ballot box.'

Fabian Virchow, Professor of Social and Cultural Sciences and Head of Research on Right-Wing Extremism, Hochschule Düsseldorf University of Applied Sciences

Cover image: Poland's Independence Day Celebrations Amid Covid-19 – Omar Marques, Getty Images

Designed by EMC Design Ltd

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

ISBN 978-1-009-72073-1

9 781009 720731 >

ZELLER

DEMOBILISING THE FAR RIGHT

CAMBRIDGE

MICHAEL C. ZELLER

DEMOBILISING THE FAR RIGHT

Patterns and Processes from Demonstration Campaigns in Germany, England, and Austria

